POSSESSING

HISTORICAL OR ARCHÆOLOGICAL INTEREST.

COMPILED WITH A HISTORICAL INTRODUCTION

BY

MILES IRVING, I.C.S.,

LATE JENKYNS EXHIBITIONER OF BALLIOL.

Never the lotus closes, never the wildfowl wake,
But a soul goes out on the East Wind that died for England's sake—
Man or woman or suckling, mother or bride or maid —
Because on the bones of the English the English Flag is stayed.

INTRODUCTION.

Let us now praise famous men, and our fathers that begat us.

There be of them that have left a name behind them, that their praises might be reported.

And some there be, which have no memorial; who are perished, as though they had never been; and are become as though they had never been born. —

Ecclus. xliv.

The original forerunner of the list of Christian tombs and monuments now published was a "List of monuments of historical but not archæological interest in the Punjab" which was tentatively compiled in 1890 by Mr. Charles Rodgers of Amritsar. On the basis of this list a series of District lists was prepared by the Public Works Department, and these were afterwards revised and combined into one list by the Home Department of the Government of India. This list was subsequently recast and sent to Chaplains in the Punjab for check, and set up for publication with a historical introduction contributed by Mr. E. D. Maclagan, I.C.S. This officer's examination of the list, however, disclosed the fact that it was extremely incomplete, containing indeed less than two hundred of the 1,100 inscriptions contained in this volume, and was besides seriously inaccurate in its transcription of those epitaphs which it did contain. It was therefore decided to place an officer of the Indian Civil Service on special duty for four months to revise and complete the list, and this volume is the result of his labours. Only a few copies of the original list were struck off for record. The reader who comes across one of these will do well not to trust to the accuracy of any inscription as given in it, but in reading the introduction he will recognise how much of what now follows is due both in matter and form to Mr. Maclagan, and will join in the compiler of the revised work in his regret that the mass of new materials that he has obtained prevents him from printing the former introduction as it stands. The arrangement of the present volume, with the biographical notes relegated to a second part, is not an ideal one, but has been rendered inevitable by the exigencies of time and type. And in referring to these notes the editor wishes to acknowledge his indebtedness to Mr. William de Rh[s] Philipe of Simla. With insignificant exceptions they consist of the records of the services of officers of the British or Indian Armies who are buried in this country, and these have been supplied entirely by the researches of Mr. Philipe in the records of the Adjutant-General's office, and from the private memoranda preserved by him in the course of a long service. To him also are due the accounts of the battles of the Sikh wars which are given in the text.

In point of antiquity the Christian monuments of the Punjab have nothing to show that can compare with the Dutch and Portuguese inscriptions of the 16th and 17th centuries which are found in Madras and Bengal. The British flag only crossed the Jumna in 1803 and the Sutlej in 1846, and of the Christian adventurers who lived or travelled in the Punjab in the days before British rule the relics that remain are of the scantiest. A tomb of an Englishman, who died in the latter half of the seventeenth century, was said to exist at Kabul, but no trace of it could be found by the Mission in 1905. There were Portuguese missionaries in Lahore in the time of Akbar and Jahangir, but all trace of them and their works has long vanished. Armenians too were throughout the days of the Mughals busy travellers; we hear of them in Sirhind and Multan, and as far off as Kabul there was found in the first Afghan War a small Armenian community who presented their children to the English Chaplain for baptism. But there is no trace of their monuments prior to the close of the eighteenth century. A few Armenian monuments of this date survive in the Deremao cemetery at Delhi, the earliest being that of Karo of Tiflis, who died in 1787. In the same cemetery are three early French inscriptions and a number of curious graves built in the Muhammadan style and bearing Persian inscriptions, relics doubtless of the foreign mercenaries in the Mahratta service. Among them is the oldest Christian monument in the Punjab, the grave of Messiah, apparently a convert, whose touching epitaph relates how he left this world, friendless like his Master, on January 10th, 1782. But of the officers of the Mahratta service and the other adventurers and free-lances who made of the debateable lands a happy hunting ground but few monuments are left. The noble De Boigne, Perron, the stout soldier debauched by power, Bourquien, "both fool and coward" as Skinner called him, alike found a resting place in France. The infamous Sombre is buried at Agra. George Thomas, the Irish sailor who reigned at Hansi and aspired to conquer the Punjab, sleeps at Berhampur in Bengal. Hopkins, his gallant young Lieutenant, lies in an unknown grave somewhere in the Rohtak District. Five only of these soldiers of fortune are commemorated by any monument in the Punjab, of whom three—Deremao at Delhi and Ferez and Etienne at Gurgaon—are of no note At Hansi is a tomb to the valiant Bernier who fell in the siege that dethroned George Thomas ; the stone does not however mark his resting place, as it was found in a village by a member of the Skinner family. Most famous of all, James Skinner, founder of Skinner's Horse, lies before the altar of the Church he built in Delhi. In the churchyard lies his warm friend, William Fraser the Commissioner, who was assassinated in 1835. Theirs was a strange friendship between men whose character had much in common. On the one side was the rough Scotchman whom Jacquemount describes as " half Asiatic in his habits, but an excellent man, with great originality of thought, a metaphysician to boot, and enjoying the best possible reputation of being a country bear." On the other hand, the simple and gallant son of a Rajput mother, himself more than half oriental in his habits of life, an eastern Dugald Dalgetty, careless of the side he fought on, but faithful till death to the salt he ate. It was told of Fraser that he accepted a Major's commission under Skinner rather than an independent Lieutenant-Colonelcy, and the depth of Skinner's devotion is seen in the touching letter he wrote from Delhi to his friend's brother a year after the ' sudden and melancholy loss of one as dear to me as life.' " I came here," he writes, " to have my church consecrated, which was done on the 21st instant, and a most handsome white marble tomb has been put over poor William. So you see, by the blessing of God, I have served Him and my friend too, whose memory and love remain firm in my old heart ; and I only wish that when I am no more I may be laid alongside of him. In him I have lost the best friend I ever had in this world ; and my friendship with the world ends with him. I only wish I were lying with him." Less than six years, and his body was brought in from Hansi to rest besides that of his friend. All Delhi came out to meet it, and " none of the emperors," said the people, " were ever brought into Delhi in such state as Sikandar Sahib."

The second generation of adventurers who took service with Ranjit Singh have likewise left few memorials. Avitabile retired in good time to Naples, Ventura to Paris, and Court to his home in Southern France. Madame Ventura, however, lies in the cemetery at Ludhiana, and so does Dubignon who married her sister. The Vicomte Jean Louis Alexis de Facieu is buried at Ferozepore where he died in 1843. His son, promoted by Ventura to his father's post, left the Punjab in 1844 and took service with the Burmese Court. Allard died in Peshawar, and though no stone exists to his memory, contemporary evidence makes it certain that he lies in the mausoleum in the grounds of Kapurthala House at Lahore by the side of his little daughter " Mlle. Marie Charlotte née le 12 Nov. 1826, décedée le 5 Avril 1827," who gives the house its name of the ' Kuri Bagh.' His adopted son, Achilles, Dr. Honigberger's patient, lies, it is probable, in the old Roman Catholic Cemetery hard by. Lahore must contain the dust of many of the foreigners who came to the court of Ranjit Singh. Some one of them must lie under the unnamed tomb in the Anarkali garden, and men remember to have seen graves in Muzang, possibly the tombs in the north corner of the compound of ' The Lawn ' at Lahore near the Mauj Darya shrine. Here, one may fancy, is buried the Mauritius Creole Henri Francois Stanislas de Laroche du Rouget who in December 1842 ' when intoxicated with liquor died of a fall from his horse at night ' and was buried by his faithful Mussammat Fatteh

Bakhsh 'near the tower of Mauj Darya.' Under a big tree outside the eastern wall of the Shahdara Serai is the foundation of the tomb of M. Amise, "Musa Farangi," who, as related by the traveller Masson, was assigned Jahangir's tomb as a residence by Ranjit Singh and whose death the Muhammadans attributed to the wrath of the Emperor at the desecration of his grave by an infidel. Many of the officers in the Sikh service were killed by their own troops when the Punjab rose in 1848. At Haripur the Viennese American 'Commedan,' Canora or Canara, refused to move his guns at Chattar Singh's orders without James Abbott's leave, and fell shot through the back by his men. The Resident, Sir Frederick Currie, thought it served him right, but Abbott thought otherwise, and raised a tomb to his memory at Haripur. John Holmes, the half-caste bandsman who became a Colonel in the Sikh service, was killed by the Sikh troops at Bannu in 1848, and lies in a nameless grave in Bannu cemetery. Only the entry in the register tells us that grave No. 1 is his. He was at Bannu with Edwardes, and it was a question between the latter and Reynell Taylor whether Holmes' Christianity was of a sufficiently pronounced type to admit him to the weekly services. As after his death claims for pension were put in by three mothers and two widows, perhaps Edwardes' scruples were not unfounded. Of other adventurers, Ford was killed by Sikh mutineers at Peshawar and Foulkes at Mandi; McPherson was killed in the fight at Sidhu Hasam outside Multan, and is buried at Ahmadpur. At Sujanpur in the Kángra District is said to be the grave of O'Brien, one of the British deserters who took service with the minor Native Chiefs. At Nurpur in the same District is the grave of the adopted son of Josiah Harlan, the Quaker from Philadelphia, who from Ranjit Singh's secret agent became Governor of Nurpur and Gujrat. Last of his race died the wonderful old traveller and soldier of fortune, Alexander Gardner, at one time robber chief in Afghanistan, at another a Governor under Ranjit Singh, who after a long retirement at Jammu wished to be buried with Christian men, and lies in a nameless grave at Sialkot.

Now leaving the men of other nations who lived and died in the Punjab, we retrace our steps to follow by the tombstones of the dead, the advancé of the British flag. Eleven British officers fell at Laswari and may possibly lie in the old cemetery at Dariaganj under the cross to the memory of the nameless dead. But the earliest inscriptions at Delhi are those of Sergeant Walker (1808) and Major Eagle (1811). Earlier than either is the tomb of Captain Bagshaw at Karnal (1807), the garrison of which place had been strengthened in the previous year in anticipation of a raid by Ranjit Singh. That monarch's advance in 1809 to within 20 miles of our lines shows this to have been no idle precaution.

The only traces of the Gurkha war are to be found in the monument at Nahan to four British officers who fell in the actions of Jampta and Jaithak. Ochterlony, the victorious General, is said to be buried in the compound of his house at Delhi, but no inscription remains to mark the spot. William Murray who distinguished himself in the Gurkha war is buried at Sabathu. Karnal was a big frontier cantonment from about 1830 to 1844 when its unhealthiness caused the troops to be moved to Ambala. The church was taken down to be rebuilt in the new station, but its tower, erected by private subscription, was left, and now stands, containing several tablets formerly within the church. Ludhiana was early occupied as our advanced post upon the Sutlej, and the graves there date from 1813. Three graves here commemorate the terrible disaster of 1846 when the barracks of the 50th Regiment fell, crushing beneath it men, women and children. Not long after this the cantonment was abandoned. The fort of Hansi was occupied from the Mahratta war, the first grave after Major Bernier's bearing date 1826. Another old cantonment was that of Bharawas near Rewari, but no inscriptions remain to tell us who lies buried there. The hill of Sabathu was occupied after the Gurkha war of 1815, first as the head-quarters of the Nusseeree Battalion of Gurkhas, afterwards as a cantonment for British troops. The earliest monuments bear date 1827, and in the grave of John Dade we can recognise Jacquemont's young officer " with five or six good reasons for dying " who died when he was at Sabathu in October 1830. Here too lies the little daughter of Henry Lawrence, the distinguished soldier General Adams, the explorer James Gerard, Colonel Orchard, the valiant leader of the 1st Europeans, and Major-General Tapp, for many years Superintendent of Hill States, whose most prominent feature has given the name of Tapp's nose to one of the hills near Kasauli. Simla was not taken up as a station till 1830, but the graves there date from a year earlier. A relic of the first Afghan war is to be found at Bahawalpur in the grave of Lieutenant-Colonel Duffin, deceased in 1838, erected by his comrades of the Army of the Indus. At Ferozepore, then our frontier station, is the tomb of an officer who died of wounds received at Jagdalak, and in a bazar at Rawalpindi is that of Lieutenant Frere who died on the return march of the avenging army. A rough cairn on the 44th Hill near Gandamuk marks the place of the last stand of the remnant who had won through the defile of the Khurd Kabul at Jagdalak.

Between Ferozepore and Ludhiana are the battlefields where were decided the four great contests of the Sutlej campaign of 1845-6,—Mudki and Ferozshah near Ferozepore, Aliwal near Ludhiana and Sobraon on the Sutlej, 20 miles from Ferozepore Obelisks have been erected to mark the scenes of encounter, but with one exception (Lambert's tomb near Ferozshah) those whose bodies were not brought into Ferozepore lie in nameless and, save at Mudki, in untraceable graves. Tablets have been erected in Ferozepore Church (itself a memorial to those who fell in the war) giving the names of the officers killed in the various battles, but unfortunately they are neither accurate nor complete.

In the opening fight at Mudki on 18th December 1845 fell two officers well known in the first Afghan war—Sir John McCaskill and Sir Robert Sale. Sir John McCaskill, who captured Istalif from the Afghans, was shot through the heart leading his division to the attack ; no stone marks his resting place, and he may lie beneath one of the two great masonry platforms in Mudki village underneath which are the bodies of the slain. Sale, the defender of Jalalabad, had his thigh shattered by a grapeshot and died and was buried at Ferozepore two days later, while on the field of Ferozeshah " the combined roar of 80 pieces of cannon saluted the parting spirit of the hero of Jalalabad." This was indeed, as Sir Robert Peel said, " that death to which he himself looked forward and which he coveted."

Two days after Mudki was fought the more awful struggle of Ferozshah. When the sudden darkness of the short December day shut down on the British Army, part clinging desperately to the entrenchments so hardly gained, part repulsed and rallying in the gloom, it was with a terrible sacrifice of life that even this doubtful success had been won. Among the dead was George Broadfoot, the Political Agent for the North-West Frontier, the strenuous spirit to whose precautions against Sikh aggression many at the time attributed the evil he sought to forestall. He was struck in the thigh as he rode by the Governor-General's side and dismounted, but mounted again and rode into the Sikh batteries to fall shot through the heart. He lies in Ferozepore cemetery near his old commander at Jalalabad, Sir Robert Sale, against whose counsels he had so often chafed. The pillar above his grave erected by his friend Colin Campbell describes him as " the foremost man in India "—praise which had he lived his career showed every promise of his earning. His friend Havelock fitly styled him " one of Plutarch's men," and he was, as the brass erected in the Church by the Governor-General records, " the last of three brothers who died on the battlefields of Asia." In the same cemetery lies his Assistant, Peter Nicolson (Patrick, he is miscalled in his monument), and Major Fitzroy Somerset, Military Secretary to the Governor-General. Another of the band of officers who rose into eminence in the political world in the 30's and 40's, D'Arcy Todd, fell in the same battle. He had been the British representative at Herat, but had been peremptorily recalled to military duty with his battery in 1841 owing to his withdrawal, as Lord Auckland thought, without sufficient reason. He had just lost his young and dearly loved wife whose monument in Ambala cemetery commemorates her death and his. Called away, as he touchingly said,

"from the open grave," he led his troop into action at Mudki and Ferozshah and perished in the latter battle. "Among the many that fell on that mournful day," writes Kaye, "there was not a braver soldier or a better man."

The battlefield of Aliwal is marked by the monument erected there in 1870, but the names of the dead are commemorated only in the tablet in Ferozepore church and in the tombstone, intended for the battlefield, which now stands in a garden at Ludhiana. Four young officers are commemorated in the former, two from the 16th Lancers whose famous charge broke the squares of the staunchest Sikh troops—Avitabile's own regiment.

The last battle of the first Sikh war was that which drove the Sikhs from their entrenchments at Sobraon into the Sutlej. Commanding the division on the British left fell Sir Robert Dick, who had led the 42nd at Cuidad Rodrigo more than 30 years before. He was wont to say that 'the bullet is not moulded that will kill Bob Dick,' but he was none the less laid low by a grapeshot, as the second line sweeping on carried the Sikh trenches, and his body lies in Ferozepore cemetery. On the extreme right, the 31st and 50th Foot lost each two officers including Lieutenant-Colonel Ryan of the 50th, and the 14th N. I. young Beatson not yet recovered from the wound he received at Ferozshah; but the greatest loss was suffered by the centre division which charged three times, our men mounting on each other's shoulders to assail the entrenchments. Here fell Colonel Cyril Charles Taylor, commanding a brigade, four officers of the 1st Europeans, and Major Fisher of the Sirmoor Battalion, a sportsman of renown in the forests of the Dun. No trace of the graves of the fallen remains on the battlefield; some of the dead were brought in to Ferozepore, but few monuments to their memory are to be found, and even the memorial brass in Ferozepore Church omits more names than it gives. So ended the campaign of the Sutlej. Together with those who fell in it may be commemorated its historian Joseph Davy Cunningham. He served through the war, and in 1848 published his History of the Sikhs, a work which commended itself so little to his superiors that he was sent back to military duty on the ground of having used in it information confidentially known to him in his official capacity. He died and was buried at Ambala in 1851.

The period of tranquility between the two Sikh wars is marked by the lonely grave of Major Troup at the frontier post of Mukerian, by some graves at Jullundur, Hoshiarpur, Nikodar and Kangra where new cantonments were formed in the newly acquired Jullundur Doab, and by a few graves in Lahore where a British Resident was set to rule by advice a turbulent and yet unsubdued nation The outbreak was not long delayed. A little more than two years after Sobraon Mr. Vans Agnew and Lieutenant Anderson, sent to relieve of his charge Mulraj, the Governor of Multan, were attacked by the Sikh soldiery as they were riding with him out of the fort. Wounded they took shelter in the Idgah. Mulraj made no movement to their rescue, and as evening fell the crowd began to close around the mosque. On the morrow the guns of the fort opened on the Idgah, and by evening all the escort had deserted except the faithful Sardar Kahn Singh, and a few horsemen and munshis and servants. For the rest, in Edwardes' words :—

"A company of Moolraj's Muzubees, or outcasts turned Sikhs, led on the mob It was an appalling sight; and Sirdar Khan Sing begged of Mr. Agnew to be allowed to wave a sheet, and sue for mercy. Weak in body from loss of blood, Agnew's heart failed him not. He replied: 'The time for mercy is gone; let none be asked for. They can kill us two if they like: but we are not the last of the English; thousands of Englishmen will come down here when we are gone, and annihilate Moolraj and his soldiers and his fort.' The crowd now rushed in with horrible shouts, made Khan Sing prisoner, and pushing aside the servants with the butts of their muskets, surrounded the two wounded officers. Lieutenant Anderson from the first had been too much wounded even to move; and now Mr. Agnew was sitting by his bedside, holding his hand, and talking in English. Doubtless they were bidding each other farewell for all time. Goodhur Sing, a Muzubee so deformed and crippled by old wounds that he looked more like an imp than mortal man, stepped forth from the crowd with a drawn sword, and after insulting Mr. Agnew with a few last indignities, struck him twice upon the neck, and with a third blow cut off his head. Some other wretch discharged a musket into the lifeless body. Then Anderson was hacked to death with swords; and afterwards the two bodies were dragged outside, and slashed and insulted by the crowd, then left all night under the sky."

Of the combined movement against Mulraj inspired by the genius of Edwardes, the only memorial is the grave at Ahmadpur of Hamish McGregor McPherson, commandant of one of the regular regiments of the Nawab of Bahawalpur, who fell at the victory of Sidhu Hasam, won on July 1, 1848, by the troops under Edwardes, Lake and Cortlandt. The force under General Whish took up a position before Multan in the August following, and the city was taken in January of the following year. Numerous scattered graves commemorate the officers who were killed in the siege, and in the Fort a stately monument covers the resting place of Agnew and Anderson, and records the fulfilment of their last prophetic words.

While Multan was under siege the campaign of the Punjab was pursuing its course further north. At the first action, the cavalry skirmish of Ramnagar, fell four officers whose names are recorded in a tablet over the entrance of an old summer residence of Ranjit Singh, and whose bodies are buried in the adjoining garden. One was Subadar Major Mir Sher Ali of the 8th Light Cavalry who fell fighting at the age of 78. The others were Colonel William Havelock, General Cureton and Captain Fitzgerald. The first was the elder brother of Henry Havelock, and his early exploits in the Peninsula have been immortalized by Napier. It was he who when the Spanish troops stood irresolute at Vera 35 years before, "taking off his hat called on the Spaniards to follow him, and putting spurs to his horse cleared the abattis at a bound." "The soldiers," adds Napier, "shouting for el chico blanco, the fair boy, so they called him, for he was very young and had light hair, with one shock broke through the French." It was the same impetuous Havelock who now led the 14th Light Dragoons in the rash charge into the sandy river-bed where they suffered so severely. He was last seen surrounded by the enemy, his left arm half severed from his body, with the right dealing furious blows at his antagonists. Not until some days after the fight was his mutilated body recovered. Cureton who saw the rashness of the charge was galloping to stop it, but on his way was shot through the heart by a Sikh concealed in a ravine. Of three of his sons who served in the Sikh wars two afterwards rose to distinction; the third found a soldier's grave at Chillianwala, where his horse carried him into the ranks of the enemy.

No British officer was killed at the artillery duel of Sadullapur, and the battlefield monument, which has the form of a cross, bears the names of two native officers only. The grave of a Brahmin and a Sayyid the villagers call it, and they may be right.

The terrible day of Chillianwala, with its Pyrrhic victory that sent Sir Charles Napier out in hot haste to relieve Lord Gough, is the best commemorated of the Punjab battlefields. The graves of our dead were enclosed by a stone wall in 1851, except those of the rank and file of the 24th Foot who were not brought in to be buried with the rest because their comrades could not bear the distressing sight. Three masonry platforms some distance off mark where they lie. An obelisk was erected within the enclosure on the site occupied by our Field Hospital during the battle, and an inscription in four languages tells in Homeric phraseology, how 'on both sides innumerable warriors passed from this life dying in mortal combat.' A beautiful cross erected by Lord Mayo in 1871 records the names of the officers, British and Indian, who fell on that terrible January day. The 24th Foot lost 12 officers including Lieutenant-Colonel Robert Brookes who had just returned from furlough and a recent marriage to charge at the head of the corps, and the Pennycuicks, father and son, the one commanding the brigade and the other an Ensign of 17. The latter seeing a Sikh slashing at his father's body rushed to the rescue and stood bestriding it until he fell shot to the heart. A separate monument on the battlefield and a tablet at Sialkot commemorate them. Of the other brigadiers who commanded at Chillianwala the unfortunate Pope was severely wounded and died at Kasauli in the following April; and Mountain died a few years later at Fatehgarh, and is commemorated by a tablet at Simla. A separate monument near the obelisk marks the grave of Major Ekins, Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army, at whose grave Lord Gough wept for sorrow. Among the dead whose resting places are not distinguished is the gallant Major Christie of the Horse Artillery, buried at the request of his devoted battery in the same trench as the rank and file, and Bamfield of the 59th Native Infantry who fell mortally wounded in the arms of his son. In connection with this battle a melancholy interest attaches to the grave of Lieutenant-Colonel King. He was in command of the 14th Light Dragoons who retreated so disastrously, and unfounded reports were put about as to his conduct on that occasion. They are sufficiently answered in Thackwell's Second Sikh War; but at the time he appears to have lacked the support from his superiors that he deserved, and on the release by the Commander-in-Chief of an insolent trooper of his regiment, he took his own life. His grave at Lahore erected by the non-commissioned officers and men of his regiment half reveals a tragedy whose bitterness may only be guessed at.

Our losses at the crowning mercy of Gujrat were comparatively slight. No monument is needed to mark the field of battle, which was around the town of Gujrat, but the dead lie interred in a small enclosure near by. Among them is the tomb of Captain Anderson of the Bengal Artillery, who had been at the siege of Multan and marched his men 60 miles in 48 hours to join the Northern Force. It is worthy of note that of all the Christians slain in the Punjab Campaign but four were buried without Christian rites The credit for this is due to the Chaplain, the Reverend W. J. Whitting, who at Ramnagar drew on himself the Sikh fire in his frequent attempts to recover Colonel Havelock's body, and after Chilianwala obtained from Lord Gough an escort to enable him to recover the bodies of the fallen. Two tablets in the wall of Jullundur church to the memory of officers killed in the storming of the heights of Dullah on the 16th January 1849 bring to mind an almost forgotten incident of the second Sikh war.

After the annexation of the Punjab it is to the Frontier that we turn for the graves that mark the onward progress of the Pax Britannica At Kohat the grave of Ensign Sitwell (the brave boy whose courage called forth the praise of Sir Charles Napier and deserves a less pompous memorial) commemorates the expedition of 1850 against the Kohat Pass Afridis, the same clans that "destroyed" poor Michael Healy buried at the same place. The inscription hardly needed to have gone on to specify his nationality. At Haripur are buried Messrs. Carne and Tapp, the officers of the Salt Department whose murder in 1851 was the cause of the first Black Mountain expedition. In the same year was murdered Captain Grantham at Peshawar, and in 1853 Mackeson, "the beau ideal of a soldier," fell by the hand of an assassin. The monument opposite Peshawar Court-house which covers his body worthily records his fame.

There are no other monuments of special interest before the Mutiny year. To 1857 the Punjab cemeteries bear grim witness, chiefly, of course, those of Delhi, where over 50 inscriptions commemorate the victims of massacre or those who fell in the struggle for the city. The former are for the most part commemorated in tablets in St. James Church, the only graves of the murdered being those of the Thompson family in the old cemetery, of Miss Clifford in the Cashmere Gate cemetery, and two graves on the Ridge sacred to the memory of four officers of the 54th Native Infantry murdered at the main guard at the Cashmere Gate. Those who fell in the siege lie for the most part in the Rajpura cemetery, but some are buried in the Cashmere Gate cemetery, and there are isolated graves near Hindu Rao's house and in the Sadr Bazar.

A list of the actions of the siege of Delhi and of the officers killed between May 30th and September 20th, 1857, is given on the Mutiny memorial that crowns the Ridge, but it is by no means complete. It is headed with the name of Nicholson, who lies under a simple stone in the Cashmere Gate cemetery close to Greathed, Agent of the Lieutenant-Governor with the Force, who died four days before him. Next come the names of Colonel Chester and his Aide-de-Camp Captain Russell, killed by the same cannon shot at the battle of Badli ki Serai on June 8th, and of Captain Delamain who fell in the same encounter, all three buried in the Rajpura cemetery. No stone remains to mark where lie Captain Fagan and Lieutenant Hildebrand (killed in the breaching batteries on September 12th and 7th respectively) or Lieutenants Perkins (killed in the action of the Hindun on May 31st) or Tandy (killed in the assault on the Cashmere Gate). Lieutenant Dickens is buried in the Rajpura cemetery, but Salkeld, the hero of the Cashmere Gate, though commemorated on the scene of his prowess, lies in an unknown grave, as also does Captain Greensill, shot accidentally by a sentry (or some said by a brother officer) on July 20th. The graves of Surgeon Moore (mortally wounded at the Hindun) and of Lieutenant-Colonel Yule (killed in the attack on the rear on June 19th) are unknown, and the only other memorial to Lieutenants Pogson, Webb and Mountsteven of the 8th (the first two mortally wounded at the Water Bastion, the last at the action of Sabzimandi on June 9th), is a stone in the wall of the Cashmere Gate cemetery. Lieutenant Bradshaw fell in the street fighting after the capture of the Cashmere Gate, leading a rush of the 52nd on a gun; Captain Andrews and Ensign Napier were the one killed, the other mortally wounded at the action of the Hindun; Lieutenant York was mortally wounded while repulsing the attack on the Sabzimandi picquet: all these lie in nameless graves; Captain Law (killed on July 23rd), Lieutenant Travers (mortally wounded in the attack on the Alipur picquet on August 2nd) and Lieutenant Lumsden killed at Najafgarh) are buried in the Rajpura cemetery, as also is Ensign Wheatly, killed at Hindu Rao's house. Ensign Walter (who died of a sunstroke got in the Sabzimandi action of July 18th) and Lieutenant Browne (killed in the attack on the right batteries on August 6th) lie in unknown graves. Ensign Davidson, killed at the Mori breach, and Lieutenant Humfray, mortally wounded in the city on September 15th, are buried in Rajpura cemetery. Here also lies Quentin Battye, second in command of the Guides, who fell in the action of June 9th. He was one of 10 brothers of whom three lie in the cemeteries of the Punjab,—Quentin at Delhi, Wigram and Frederick at Mardan. His last words Dulce et decorum pro patria mori are engraven on his tomb, and are a fitting motto for his race. Lieutenants Murray, killed in the assault, and Bannerman, who fell on September 7th, have nameless graves: Lieutenant Humphrys, mortally wounded on June 19th, and Ensign Phillips, killed at the Bank House on September 16th or 17th, lie in Rajpura cemetery, as do Dely Gabbett Tyler and Elkington of the 61st. Dely and Tyler are not mentioned on the monument. There is no tombstone to Captain Knox (killed at the Flagstaff Battery) or to Lieutenants Fitzgerald (killed at the Mori breach), Harrison (killed at Badli ki Serai on June 8th and buried on the field of battle) and Briscoe (killed in the attack on the Lahore Gate), or to Lieutenant Crozier (killed in the Sabzi Mandi on July 18th). Major Jacob, commanding the 1st Bengal Fusiliers (who fell at the Mori breach) is buried at Rajpura. Captain McBarnet of the same regiment who led the attack on Kishanganj on September 14th lies with his men near where he fell in the Sadr Bazar. Lieutenant Speke, shot at the same time as Nicholson, has no monument to mark his grave, but Lieutenaut Sherriff, mortally wounded at the capture of Ludlow Castle Battery, seems to have two (Nos. 103 and 104) which are placed on graves in different parts of the Rajpura cemetery. Lieutenants Jackson and Gambier are buried in Rajpura.

This closes the list of officers given on the monument. By a strange omission it leaves out the name of Sir Henry Barnard, buried in Rajpura. It also omits Lieutenant Alexander who had come to Delhi with stores and served with the besieging force as a Volunteer, Lieutenant Walker, Captain Gore Willock (another Volunteer who died of typhoid), and Lieutenant Somerville, all of whom are buried in Rajpura, and a considerable number of others.

Four monuments in Delhi city commemorate special incidents of the siege. On the city wall between the Kabul and Lahore Gates a tablet marks the spot where Nicholson met his death-wound. A tablet on the Cashmere

Gate tells the heroic story of its assault, and over the gate of the old Magazine are written the names and deeds of the nine resolute Englishmen of its garrison. Finally, an obelisk in front of the Telegraph Office tells how the electric telegraph saved India. Yet, more than all one memorial haunts the mind as we leave Delhi, the Cross in the old cemetery in memory of 1857, sacred to the memory of those whose nameless graves lie around "Violence shall be no more heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders. For the Lord shall be their Everlasting Light and the days of thy mourning shall be ended."

With the Delhi Field Force should be mentioned General Anson, the Commander-in-Chief, who died and was buried at Karnal on his way to Delhi. His remains were subsequently taken to England, and no monument marks their temporary resting place. Colonel Hallifax of the 75th Foot who also died on the march to Delhi lies buried here. Other memorials of the story of Delhi are to be found at Simla in the graves of Lieutenant-Colonel Murray Mackenzie, Lieutenant Edward Salwey and Colonel Herbert Garbett, and at Kasauli in those of Captains Robert Hunt and Alexander Chancellor; all of these died from the effect of wounds received at Delhi. At Simla also is buried Colonel Keith Young, Judge Advocate-General of Bengal, whose diary and correspondence are a valuable authority on the siege.

In the Punjab apart from Delhi the first outbreak was the rising at Hissar, Hansi and Sirsa on May 29th, commemorated in the monument at Hissar and graves at Hansi and Sirsa. On June 7th the regiments at Jullundur mutinied and marched for Delhi, and at Ludhiana is the grave of Herbert Durnford, who died from the effect of wounds received in defending the bell of arms of his company. At Jhelum the native troops rose on July 7th, and in the first unsuccessful action against them fell Francis Spring of the 24th Foot, who is buried there. The example of mutiny was followed two days later at Sialkot where the whole station was overrun, only those surviving who were able to make their way to the Fort. The little graveyard under the Fort holds the remains of Brigadier Brind and other victims of the massacre. The mutineers made off towards Delhi and were overtaken and destroyed by Nicholson at Trimmu Ghât. At Gurdaspur are the graves of some soldiers of the Bengal Horse Artillery and Her Majesty's 52nd who fell in this action. The only other outbreak in the Punjab was that in Montgomery, then the Gugera District. This was not as elsewhere a military revolt, but a rising of the turbulent cattle-lifting tribes of the Ravi, unused for centuries to any but a casual submission to authority. Mr. Berkeley, an Extra Assistant Commissioner, was patrolling the scrub when his party was surprised by the enemy, and he, his horse falling into a quicksand, was cut off and fell fighting to the last. A cross in front of the Court-house at Montgomery records his gallant death.

Before leaving the Mutiny year must be mentioned one of the great heroes of the Punjab, Henry Lawrence, killed in the defence of Lucknow, whose memory is kept green in his old province by the Military School at Murree and by the Military Asylum which he founded at Sanawar. There are tablets in memory of him, his wife, his little daughter who lies at Sabathu, and his son Alexander who is buried at Simla.

The next event of importance to which the Punjab cemeteries bear witness is the Ambela campaign of 1863. Most of the dead lie in the old cemetery at Mardan, but some are to be found at Nowshera and Peshawar. At Kohat is the grave of the officer killed in the action with the Bazotis in 1868. The advance into Afghanistan in 1878 is commemorated at Peshawar by the graves of Birch and Fitzgerald who fell at Ali Masjid, and by the tablet in Abbottabad Church to Powell, killed in the Kurram Valley; and the massacre of the Cavagnari expedition on September 3rd, 1879, and the heroic death of the escort of the Guides is borne witness to by the Kabul memorial arch at Mardan, and the tablet to Sir Pierre Louis Napoleon Cavagnari in Kohat Church. Those who died at Kabul lie in the walled cemetery of the Sherpur Cantonment, but the tombstones have been taken off, and are now stored in a small hut in a corner of the cemetery, and many of them are broken. At Mardan lies Wigram Battye of the Guides, killed at Fatahabad. O'Renny, mortally wounded at the forcing of the Zawa Pass, is buried at Kohat, and Gamble lies at Landi Kotal. In Abbottabad Church is a tablet to John Cook who fell near Kabul at the end of 1879. Colonel O'Bryen who died in Afghanistan in 1880 lies in the Jamrood Road cemetery at Peshawar. The Black Mountain expedition of 1888 is recorded in the graves of Legh Richmond Battye and others at Abbottabad; the expedition of 1893 against the Kohistanis by the grave of Major Daniell at Chilas; the Chitral relief expedition in the monument at Nowshera, the graves of Frederick Battye and Peebles at Mardan, of Ross who lies in a lonely grave at Gilgit, of Bliss and Ubsdell at Drosh, and of Baird in Chitral Fort. At Dera Ismail Khan are graves of officers killed in Waziristan between 1894 and 1900. Then comes the campaign of 1897, opened by the bloody catastrophe of Maizar, commemorated by the wooden crosses at Datta Khel. In a little over two months the flame of revolt burst out in the north, and the attack on the Malakand is recorded in the graves at Malakand and Mardan. An inscription on the rock of the old Buddhist road marks the spot where Willoughby Taylor met his death, saving the garrison from being overwhelmed in the first surprise. A very small proportion of those who fell in this campaign found a resting place in British soil, and the rest lie in graves carefully hidden to secure them from desecration. At Kohat are buried the officers who fell at Dargai, and Richmond Moffat Battye is buried at Para Chinar. Sir Henry Havelock Allen lies at Rawalpindi, and a rough stone, not far from Ali Masjid, is preserved to mark the spot where he was shot while rashly riding in advance of the troops. In the Taikal cemetery, Peshawar, lies Lieutenant-Colonel Houghton, killed at the Shin Kamar Pass, General Yeatman Biggs, Lieutenant-Colonel O'Bryen killed at Agrah; while Major Hickman lies buried at Jhelum. These are all the graves of the killed in this campaign which are known, nor do the tablets in the churches of the two Provinces adequately supplement them. The catalogue of war is closed by the death of Captain Down, Political Agent of the Tochi, killed in a border skirmish in the Shaptu Valley in 1902, and buried at Bannu, and by a small but expensive act of long deferred justice in the taking of the nest of outlaws at Gumatti, which added two more to the tombstones in Bannu cemetery.

A roll of death sadder than that in battle is the list of those who have perished on the Frontier by assassination. The next after Mackeson so to fall was Lieutenant Hand, shot near the Khyber Pass in 1857. Two years after Major Mecham was murdered while travelling in a dooly between Bannu and Kohat near Latammar where a monument marks the spot; he is buried at Bannu. Major Adams, Deputy Commissioner of Peshawar, and Lieutenant Ommanney of the Guides were murdered in 1865: the former is buried in the Taikal cemetery at Peshawar; the latter's grave has not been found. In 1867 Charles Bean, the manager of a travelling circus, was induced by an Afghan to cross the border and then treacherously shot: an almost obliterated stone in the Jamrood Road cemetery at Peshawar records his fate. The same cemetery holds the remains of Major Macdonald, murdered at Michni by Mohmands in 1873. The graves of Surgeon Smith and Lieutenant Kinloch, murdered on the Zaimukht Frontier in 1879, have not been found; but in the Taikal cemetery at Peshawar lie Captain Fulford murdered in 1882, Mr. Ross murdered in 1897, and five others (Captain Barwell, Bandsman Leighton, Lieutenant-Colonel LeMarchant, Mr. Gunter, Lieutenant Green) assassinated between February 1898 and March 1900. There is in Kohat Church a tablet to Lieutenant Simond killed by Dauri fanatics in 1895, and to Lieutenant-Colonel Harman who lost his life at Wana in securing a fanatic who attacked the mess. Finally, at Dera Ismail Khan lies Captain Bowring, Political Agent, assassinated at Sarwakai in 1904.

Before leaving the Frontier one other inscription deserves special notice. At Dera Ismail Khan lies buried Sir Henry Durand, Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, killed at Tonk in 1871, by his elephant being driven through a gateway too low to admit its passage. An inscription over the gateway records the sad event.

East of the Indus the record of the country for the last half century has been one of peace, and save for the Dharmsala earthquake of 1905 the monuments bear witness to no striking events, unless we may except the Kuka rising of 1872 and connect it with the name of Sir Thomas Douglas Forsyth, commemorated at Palampur. Among those whose names are recorded in the inscriptions of this period may be mentioned that of James Bruce, Earl of Elgin and Kincardine, in the churchyard at Dharmsala which contains the graves of the victims of the earthquake of 1905. A tablet which was in the ruined church records the memory of William Delafield Arnold, brother of the poet, and his wife, so touchingly commemorated in the stanzas from Carnac and a 'Southern Night,' of whom the one died at Gibraltar, the other at Kangra :—

Ah me! Gibraltar's strand is far,
But farther yet across the brine
Thy dear wife's ashes buried are,
Remote from thine.
For there, where morning's sacred fount
Its golden rain on earth confers,
The snowy Himalayan Mount
O'ershadows hers.

In the church of Palampur, likewise destroyed by the earthquake, stood a tablet to Sir Thomas Forsyth who as Commissioner of Jullundur founded this little station, now also deserted. He was Deputy Commissioner at Ambala when the Mutiny broke out and did good service there, both in keeping the peace and in sending supplies to Delhi. Afterwards he took part in suppressing the mad rising of the Kukas in 1872. At Lahore are buried Colonel Wace, Financial Commissioner, Alexander Anderson and Robert Clarke of the Indian Civil Service, General Vousden and Bishop Matthews. At Amritsar lies Gore Ousely, Financial Commissioner, and Robert Clark, 50 years' Missionary. At Ráwalpindi lies Bishop Milman of Calcutta, at Murree John Anderson, Judge of the Chief Court, at Ambala General Gott, and at Simla Surgeon-General Beatson. Miss Tucker (A. L. O. E.) lies in the small Indian Christian cemetery at Batala. Nor has the Punjab been unmindful of great men whom a happier fate has left to die in their own country. No church contains any tablet to John Lawrence, but his statue on Lahore Mall still offers the people of the Punjab their choice to be governed by sword or pen; a memorial cross in front of the Secretariat recalls Sir Donald McLeod, Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab; and in Lahore Cathedral are tablets to Reynell Taylor, Robert Montgomery and Charles Aitchison, great names in the history of the Province; to Thomas Valpy French, first Bishop of Lahore, who died at Muskat, a lonely witness of the Kingdom of Christ; and to Sir Samuel Browne. At Mardan the memory of Sir Harry Lumsden who raised the Guides is fitly enshrined.

So from Delhi to Kabul and from Gilgit to Rajanpur have we sown the Punjab for a hundred years with the bones of our bravest and what the harvest will be we still know not. For them in parting, and for us, the words of the old Athenian ring as true to-day as they did twenty-three centuries ago :

I would have you fix your eyes upon the greatness of your country, until you become filled with the love of her; and when her glory stirs your heart, reflect that this Empire has been won by men who knew their duty and dared to do it: who in the hour of battle had ever the fear of disgrace before their eyes, and who, did they fail, lost everything before honour, and freely gave their lives to their country as the best offering they could present. The sacrifice which they made is repaid to each one of them; for they received again each one for himself a praise which grows not old, and the noblest of all sepulchres,—I speak not of that in which their remains are laid, but of that in which their glory survives, and is ever and anon proclaimed in word and deed. For the whole earth is the sepulture of famous men: not only in their own country do tombs and inscriptions keep their memories green, but the wide world over there dwells an unwritten memorial of them graven not on stone, but in the hearts of men.

And not only for the famous men that have left a name behind them that their praises might be reported is this remembrance engraven in our hearts, but for all the nameless dead of our race which have no memorial.

In 1857 detachments of the Hariana Light Infantry and the 14th Irregular Cavalry were stationed at Hissar, Hansi and Sirsa, the head quarters being at Hissar. The first outbreak of the Mutiny was at Hansi on the morning of May 29th (see No. 14); news arrived at Hissar in the afternoon and the troops stationed there at once revolted. Lieutenant Barwell, the Officer Commanding, on going out to see what was the disturbance, was shot by one of the Treasury guard, and the mutineers then went off to the Jail to release the convicts. The Collector Mr. Wedderburn was murdered by a body of rebel sowars, as he was on his way to the city to guard the treasure. The uproar then became universal. the houses of the Europeans were set on fire, and two ladies, Mrs. Jefferies and Mrs. Smith, wives of two of the English clerks, were cruelly murdered by their servants, their husbands succeeding in escaping. Mrs. Barwell and Mrs. Wedderburn with their children were living in the house of the Superintendent of the Cattle Farm, and were there with their children massacred by the mutinous troops. Mr. David Thompson, the Tahsildar, was murdered by his peons.

22. Lieutenant Charles Edward Young, 50th Foot.

23. Lieutenant John Cuming Bishop, 50th Foot.

24. Assistant-Surgeon Alexander Graydon, M.D., 50th Foot.

To these names may be added that of Lieutenant James Brockman, of Her Majesty's 50th Regiment, who disappeared about this time and was, in fact, the first British Officer who lost his life in this war. This young officer had, after the march of the troops from Ludhiána to join the Army of the Sutlej, been permitted to return to that station to look after his baggage, which had been accidentally left behind, and he was never afterwards seen by any one in the regiment. It was subsequently ascertained that, when hurrying forward to rejoin his regiment, he was intercepted and killed by some of the enemy near the fort of Wadni, on or about the 17th December 1845.

THE BATTLE OF MUDKI.

On the 11th December 1845 the Sikh Army crossed the Sutlej and took up a position near Ferozepore. Immediately on receipt of intelligence of this invasion the British forces in the Upper Provinces, hastily organised in brigades and divisions, were put in motion for the purpose of repelling it, and the troops which had been stationed at Ambála and Ludhiána, having united at Bassian, reached Mudki at noon on the 18th, after a long and exhausting march of eighteen miles. Scarcely, however, had they encamped when it was announced that a portion of the Sikh Army, which had moved forward for the purpose of opposing their further advance, was close at hand, and the Commander-in-Chief, Sir Hugh Gough, immediately pushing forward with the small force under his Command, met them about two miles from that place. The battle which ensued began with a heavy cannonade on both sides, during which the advancing British Infantry suffered severely from the fire of the Sikh guns: to create a diversion, therefore, a body of cavalry (comprising the 3rd Light Dragoons, the Governor-General's Body-Guard, the 5th Bengal Light Cavalry and part of the 4th) made a movement on the enemy's left, and turning that flank, swept along the rear of his infantry and guns, silencing the latter for a time and driving the whole of his cavalry off the field. At the same time the 9th Irregular Cavalry and the remainder of the 4th Light Cavalry made a corresponding movement on the Sikh right, while the British Infantry, advancing in Echelon of lines, drove the Sikhs from position to position, until increasing darkness put a period to the conflict, the Sikhs eventually drawing off with the loss of seventeen out of the forty guns which they had brought into the field. The loss on our side amounted to 215 killed and 657 wounded, the principal sufferers being the 3rd Light Dragoons (60 killed and 35 wounded), the 31st Foot (25 killed and 132 wounded), and the 50th Foot (12 killed and 97 wounded).

THE BATTLE OF FIROZSHAHR.

ON the day succeeding the battle of Mudki Sir Hugh Gough was reinforced by the arrival of two regiments of British and two of Native Infantry, two companies of Artillery, and some heavy guns, and on the 21st December he moved forward for the purpose of assailing the Sikhs in their entrenched position around a village usually styled Ferozeshah or Firozshahr, but the real name of which appears to have been Pherúshah. At Misríwála he was joined by the troops from Ferozepore, organised as the Fourth Division of the Army of the Sutlej and commanded by Major-General Sir John H. Littler, K.C.B., and at three o'clock in the afternoon the combined forces moved forward to the attack. In the disposition for the assault (which was delivered on the western and, partially, on the southern faces of the entrenchment) the Fourth Division was placed on the extreme left, and this part of the operations was left entirely to the control of Sir John Littler; to the right of the Fourth came the Third Division, now (in consequence of the death of Sir John M'Caskill on the field of Mudki) commanded by Brigadier N. Wallace; and to the right of the Third was placed the Second Division, under the Command of Sir Walter Raleigh Gilbert: the First Division, under the Command of Sir Harry Smith, which had borne the brunt of the battle of Mudki, was kept in reserve. The three divisions last named were organised in two wings, the right of which was directed by Sir Hugh Gough himself, while the left was controlled by Lieutenant-General Sir Henry Hardinge, the Governor-General, who had volunteered his services as Second-in-Command. The assault was begun by the Division under the command of Sir John Littler, and the fortun- of war placed it in opposition to what proved to be the strongest part of the Sikh position; it advanced steadily to the attack under a most galling and destructive fire of grape and canister, and the leading Brigade (Her Majesty's 62nd Foot and the 12th and 14th Bengal Native Infantry) sustained heavy loss, the ranks appearing to melt away under the terrible hail of lead and iron, but in spite of every exertion it could not win its way into the entrenchment, and Brigadier Reed, who commanded the Brigade, perceiving that it was exposed to a most destructive fire to no purpose, ordered it to retire, which it did in almost as good order as that in which it had advanced. In the meantime the Second and Third Divisions had advanced under a fire almost as destructive as that to which the Fourth had been exposed, and "with matchless gallantry" carried the batteries opposed to them at the point of the bayonet, but the enemy could be driven no further than their camp in rear of the batteries, from which they maintained a heavy fire, and in spite of the most heroic efforts a portion only of the entrenchment was won. The First Division, which had been kept in reserve, was also pushed forward into the fight as soon as the repulse of the Fourth had been perceived, and carrying the opposing batteries it penetrated deep into the entrenchment and captured the village of Fírozshahr, which it held for several hours, while the 3rd Light Dragoons charged some of the batteries in the most gallant manner, sabred the gunners, and for a time drove the Sikhs to the further extremity of the entrenchment. But by this time the short winter's day had come to an end, and in the darkness of a moonless night the most dire confusion arose, regiments and brigades becoming mixed up in inextricable disorder, while the Sikhs, who were still holding a portion of the entrenchment, having regained some of the guns from which they had been driven, maintained a heavy and destructive fire. In these circumstances a partial retirement became necessary, and shortly after midnight the troops were withdrawn from the entenchment and bivouacked a short distance off to the south and south-west of it. Even then the Sikhs kept up their fire, and towards morning, when the moon (then entering on her last quarter) rose and revealed the position of the British troops, the fire became galling in the extreme; the fire of one great gun in particular became so destructive that Sir Henry Hardinge found it necessary to send Her Majesty's 80th and the 1st European Right Infantry against it, and it was gallantly rushed by the former corps, captured, and spiked. With daylight, however, all confusion ceased; order was restored; the troops, though exhausted with fatigue and cold, and the want of food and water, formed up, and moving forward with indomitable resolution, once more stormed the batteries, and, after a short but desperate conflict, drove the Sikhs through the village and expelled them from the entrenchment. But the contest was not yet at an end; two hours later the Sikh leader, Sardar Tej Singh, brought up a fresh army with a numerous artillery from the vicinity of Ferozepore, and during the course of the day made three strenuous efforts to regain the captured position, but though our own artillery had, from the total exhaustion of their ammunition, become useless, every attempt was repulsed, and in the end the Sikhs suddenly ceased their fire, abandoned the field, and retreated over the Sutlej, leaving behind them an immense number of killed and wounded and no less than seventy-three pieces of artillery. Our own losses in this desperate and sanguinary conflict were very heavy, amounting, including officers, to 720 killed, 1,778 wounded, and 379 missing, a total of 2,877. The main portion of this loss fell on the European troops, upon whom the Sikhs, despising the sepoys, generally concentrated their fire,—the principal sufferers being the 3rd Light Dragoons (60 killed, 92 wounded), the 9th Foot (70 killed, 203 wounded, 11 missing), the 29th Foot (70 killed, 118 wounded, 62 missing), the 31st Foot (61 killed, 101 wounded, 19 missing), the 50th Foot (27 killed, 97 wounded, 28 missing), the 62nd Foot (89 killed, 171 wounded, 14 missing), the 80th Foot (24 killed, 57 wounded, 47 missing), and the 1st European Light Infantry (51 killed, 164 wounded).

BADHOWAL.

After the battle of Fírozshahr, in December 1845, there was a lull in the operations while Sir Hugh Gough was awaiting the arrival of reinforcements, which were then on the way to join him. But about the middle of the following month the upper reaches of the Sutlej, in the vicinity of Ludhiána, became the scene of important operations. The Sikhs had, ever since the commencement of the campaign, been making raids across the river, mainly with the object of collecting supplies, and as they had stored a considerable quantity of these in the fort of Dharmkot, Sir Harry Smith, with the First Brigade of his Division (the 31st Foot and the 24th and 47th Native Infantry), was detached on the 18th to reduce the place, which he effected without difficulty. But while he was yet in movement on Dharamkot, intelligence was received at head-quarters that Sardar Ranjur Singh had crossed the river with a large force and was threatening Ludhiána and Bassián (on our line of communications). Reinforcements'(which included the 16th Light Dragoons and the 3rd Bengal Light Cavalry, both recently arrived from Meerut) were immediately despatched to join Sir Harvy, and these having united with him at Jagrâon on the 20th, he, on the followiug day, marched thence towards Ludhiána, the relief of which place had become urgently necessary. At Badhowál, however, while on the line of march and in circumstances of considerable disadvantage, he was attacked by Ranjur Sjngh, who opened a heavy fire of artillery and assailed the British rear with a cloud of eavalry. Sir Harvy, however, to whom the relief of Ludhiána and the avoidance of an engagement in his then situation were matters of predominant importance, contented himself with keeping the hostile cavalry at bay, and, calmly continuing his march, succeeded, by a series of skilful movements, in extricating his force from its disadvantageous situation, and conducted it to Ludhiána the same day, though in doing so he sustained considerable loss and was unable to prevent the Sikh horse from cutting off and plundering a large portion of his baggage. In this affair two officers fell under the artillery fire of the enemy,—

Captain Arthur Wellington Campbell, Her Majesty's 14th Foot, acting Aide-de-Camp to Major-General Sir H. G. W. Smith, K.C.B.

Lieutenant Henry Fortescue Rideout, 47th Bengal Native Infantry.

No monuments to their memory have been found, but it is probable that they were buried at Ludhiána.

Singh, and moved out accordingly on the 23rd January for the purpose of attacking the Sikh Chief at Badhowal. The latter, however, immediately retired to the river, near Talwandi, whither Sir Harry was unable to follow him then, as the Shekhawati Brigade and the Second Brigade of his own Division were on their way to join him, and it was necessary to await their arrival. The junction was effected on the 26th, and having halted another day to allow these troops to rest, Sir Harry marched at daylight on the 28th for the purpose of attacking the Sikhs in their new position. Later in the same morning Ranjur Singh, having received substantial reinforcements in men and guns, began a movement on Jagráon, with the intention of cutting in on the British line of communications, but he was not yet clear of his camp when the approach of Sir Harry Smith's force was discovered, and he therefore immediately took up a position with the village of Bundri on his right and that of Alíwál (which he held in considerable strength) slightly in advance of his left. The British troops, deploying as they marched, and, under the able dispositions of their Commander, moving forward with the precision of a review, speedily came under the fire of the Sikhs, who opened a furious cannonade from upwards of sixty pieces of artillery, but disregarding this the brigades of Hicks (the 31st Foot and the 24th and 47th Native Infantry) and Godby (the 36th Native Infantry and the Nasiri Battalion of Gurkhas) moved steadily onwards, carried the village of Alíwál with a rush, and, aided by Stedman's Brigade of Cavalry (the Body Guard, the 1st and 5th Light Cavalry and the Shekhawati Horse), broke through Ranjur Singh's left, routed it, and captured the Sikh camp. Almost at the same moment Wheeler's Brigade (the 50th Foot, the 48th Native Infantry and the Sirmúr Battalion of Gurkhas) broke through the Sikh centre and captured all the opposing guns, from which it had suffered severely in its advance, while Wilson's Brigade (the 53rd Foot and the 30th Native Infantry) with M'Dowell's Brigade of Cavalry (the 16th Lancers, the 3rd Light Cavalry and the 4th Irregular Cavalry) assailed the Sikh right with equal intrepidity and success. Here, however, the conflict was of a sterner character, for on this side the Sikh leader had placed his most efficient troops, the disciplined battalions of General Avitabile, and these offered a more strenuous opposition to their advancing foes. The 53rd, however, speedily carried Bundri at the point of the bayonet, while the 30th Native Infantry disposed, with equal celerity, of another portion of the Avitabile Brigade. The remainder of these troops, however, still continued the fight with unabated energy and resolution, until two battalions, which had formed square to receive the British Cavalry, were broken through and almost annihilated by daring charges of squadrons of the 16th Lancers led by Captain Baker-Bere and Major Smyth, and gallantly supported by the 3rd Light Cavalry under Major Angelo. The whole British force now closed in on the Sikh right, and soon the remains of Ranjur Singh's Army, routed and broken, were in headlong flight towards the river, over which they were driven with frightful carriage and with the loss of all their guns, sixty-seven in number. In this well fought action our losses were comparatively small amounting to only 151 killed, 413 wounded, and 25 missing,—or 589 in all. The corps which suffered most were the 16th Lancers (58 killed, 83 wounded, 1 missing), the 3rd Light Cavalry (29 killed, 22 wounded), the 50th Foot (10 killed, 69 wounded, 4 missing), the 48th Native Infantry (10 killed, 41 wounded) and the Sirmúr Battalion (9 killed, 40 wounded)

Os. and men killed in the battle of Sobraon on the 10th February 1846

THIS tablet does not contain many actual mistakes, but the omissions are painfully numerous, more than half the names which should have appeared on it being conspicuous only by their absence. The following is a complete list of the officers who were killed in the battle of Sobraon or who afterwards died of wounds received in that engagement :

KILLED ON THE FIELD.

1. Lieutenant-Colonel Charles Cyril Taylor, C. B., 29th Foot, Brigadier Commanding the Third Brigade of Infantry, Army of the Sutlej.

29. Ensign Carroll Henry Scatcherd, 41st Bengal Native Infantry.

To these names may be added that of Lieutenant Henry John Gregg, 42nd Bengal Native Infantry.

This officer was reported officially to have died at Ferozepore on the 2nd March 1846 "of wounds received in action with the Sikhs," but no record has been found as to when and where he received the injuries to which he succumbed. As he is not mentioned in the casualty lists of any of the great battles, it would appear to be probable that he was wounded in some affair at the outposts. With this name the tale of officers who were killed or died of wounds during the Sutlej Campaign is completed.

The Battle of Sobraon.

On the flight of the Sikhs across the Sutlej, after the battle of Firozshahr, Sir Hugh Gough advanced to Araf, and having ascertained that the enemy had established themselves in great force in advance of the village of Sobraon, on the opposite bank, he decided on making no further movement until the arrival of the reinforcements and the heavy guns which were then on the way to join him. While he was still waiting for the latter, about the middle of January 1846, the Sikhs suddenly recrossed the Sutlej in great strength and began entrenching themselves near Chota Sobraon, connecting their entrenchment with their camp on the right bank of the river by a bridge of boats. As they were thus placing themselves in the disadvantageous position of having to fight a battle with a wide river in their rear, no opposition to their proceedings was offered, so that by the time the heavy guns and the reserve ammunition reached the British Camp, about the 8th of February, the earthworks which the Sikhs had thrown up had attained a truly formidable character, and as they had nearly seventy pieces of ordnance mounted on the works, with not less than 35,000 men to defend the entrenchments, besides strong reserves in the neighbourhood and on the opposite bank, it is apparent that the task of once more driving the invaders over the Sutlej, with a force numbering little more than 16,000, and with only forty-eight guns, was no light one.

All necessary arrangements having been made, early on the morning of the 10th February, the troops were placed in position for the storming of the Sikh entrenchments, which was to take place as soon as a sufficient impression had been made by the fire of our artillery. The battle was begun at sun-rise by a heavy bombardment of the enemy's position, and when this had been maintained for two-hours-and-a half, the troops were moved forward to the assault. The attack was begun on the left by the Third Division, now under the command of Major-General Sir Robert Henry Dick, K.C.B. (a veteran of the Peninsula and Waterloo), and composed of the Fifth, Sixth and Seventh Brigades, commanded, respectively, by Brigadiers Ashburnham, Wilkinson and Stacy. Moving rapidly forward through a desolating fire the division suffered heavy losses and Sir Robert Dick himself fell mortally wounded, but pushing on without halt or check, Stacy's Brigade (composed of the 10th and the 53rd Foot and the 43rd and 59th Native Infantry) forced its way into the entrenchment without firing a shot, closely followed by Wilkinson's (80th Foot and 33rd and 63rd Native Infantry) and Ashburnham's (9th and 62nd Foot and the 26th Native Infantry), and in a brief space of time the whole Division was firmly established within the enemy's works. As it was evident, however, that unless a diversion were made the weight of the whole Sikh army would be thrown upon the leading brigades, the First (Sir Henry Smith's) and Second Sir Walter Gilbert's) Divisions were pushed forward to assail the left and centre of the Sikh position. After a series of desperate conflicts, in which they were more than once repulsed by the murderous fire to which they were exposed, these Divisions also won their way into the entrenchment, within which, even then, the enemy maintained a desperate resistance for over an hour; but little by little the Sikhs, fighting desperately to the last, were forced back, driven out of the position and hurled into the river, in which, the bridge of boats having gone to pieces under the fire of our guns and the weight of the fugitives, thousands of them perished not only by drowning but by the grape and canister of the horse artillery, which followed them to the very edge of the water. In this great battle, the Sikhs lost all their guns, sixty seven in number, and not less than 12,000 men. The loss of the victors amounted to 320 killed and 2,064 wounded. The corps which suffered principally were the 10th Foot (31 killed, 102 wounded), the 29th Foot (36 killed, 151 wounded), the 31st Foot (35 killed, 119 wounded), the 50th Foot (42 killed, 197 wounded), the 53rd Foot (8 killed, 113 wounded), the 80th Foot (13 killed, 78 wounded), the 1st European Light Infantry (35 killed, 162 wounded), the 16th Native Infantry (6 killed, 148 wounded), the 41st Native Infantry (16 killed, 116 wounded), the 43rd Native Infantry (7 killed, 96 wounded), and the Sirmúr Battalion (14 killed, 130 wounded).

FIRST DIVISION.

1st Brigade—31st Foot and 47th Native Infantry.

2nd Brigade—50th Foot, 42nd Native Infantry and Nasiri Battalion.

SECOND DIVISION.

3rd Brigade—29th Foot and 41st and 68th Native Infantry.

4th Brigade—1st European Light Infantry, 16th Native Infantry, and Sirmúr Battalion.

Erected 1869. فیروز شاہ ۲۱ دسمبر سنه ۱۸۴۵ع ਫੀਰੋਜ਼ ਸ਼ਾਹ ਮਹੀਨਾ ਪੋਹ ਤਾਰੀਖ ੨੧ ਸੰਬਤ ੧੯੦੨ The monument is a solidly constructed obelisk of burnt brick 75 feet high on a trilateral base with sides 15 feet long. The only grave on or near the battle field, besides that at Misriwala, of which there is any trace is a small obelisk about four feet high to the north of the village of Ferozeshah. There is no inscription on it. An officer visiting the place in 1876 was told by some of the old men who recollected the fight that it was the grave of a "Judge Sahib" who fell in the thick of the fight hit in the thigh, and others said it was the grave of Broadfoot Sahib, to whom the former description would closely apply. Major Broadfoot was however buried in Ferozepore cemetery.

594	5th April 1827.	Marie Charlotte Allard.	Ci Git M^lle Marie Charlotte née le 12 Nov^e 1826 décedée le 5 avril 1827 fille de M^r Allard de S^t Tropez chevalier de la Légion d' honneur General de Cavalerie Lahor le I^r juillet 1827. لهو اعز بحکم شوالئیر جنرل الارد صاحب بهادر مکان مرقد صاحب زادی مریی شار لوت برائے یاد که الهي جائس در بهشت خرین باد و بدامر زاد-در سنه ۱۸۲۷-عیسوي-موافق سنه ۱۲۴۲-هجري-مطابق سمت ۱۸۸۴-بکرمی تعمیر یافت-با لخیر-

The inscription in French is on a small slab in the floor of a domed mausoleum crowning a mound in the garden of the house that once belonged to General Allard. That in Persian is above the doorway. An account of the life of General Allard is given in the life of Colonel Alexander Gardner by Major Hugh Pearse. He was born at St. Tropez on March 8, 1785, and after serving with distinction in the French army till after the battle of Waterloo, entered Ranjit Singh's service as commandant of a corps of dragoons, and rose to the rank of General in the Sikh Army. He was also given the same rank in the French Army by Louis Philippe. Baron Hügel refers to this tomb in the following words :—"Before the main building is the tomb of his young daughter, a singular but durable monument, in the Muhammadan taste, but embellished with the cross, the sign of the father's faith, while the style of the tomb shows the mother's." Mme. Allard was a native of Kashmir. General Allard died at Peshawar on January 23, 1839, and was buried at Lahore in his own garden and almost certainly under the same mausoleum. He had a son Achilles who died in Lahore and in Dr. Honigberger's words "was buried in the cemetery, near to General Allard's own tomb, which was in his adjacent garden." This must be the old Roman Catholic cemetery which is not far from General Allard's house, but no trace of the tomb remains.

615	17th July 1877.	WILLIAM ANDREWS ..	Sacred To the Memory of WILLIAM ALLER ANDREW Honorary Lieutenant who died in Lahore, on the 17th July 1877. aged 86 years. He was present at— The assault on Bergen-op-zoom. 1814. Antwerp. 1814. Battle of Waterloo, 1815. Storming of Bhurtpore, 1826. Cabul (twice), 1839—42. Soobraon, 1846. Storming of Ghuzni, 1842. Chillianwalla, 1849. Soldier, rest! thy warfares o'er. Dream of fighting fields no more ! Erected by Subscription, as a mark of general respect for this long arduous, and honorable career. There are some curious errors in this inscription. Though the name engraved on the tombstone may have been the real designation of the individual, there is no warrant or authority for styling him "Honorary Lieutenant," as he never attained commissioned rank; he was in fact simply Pensioned Sub-Conductor William Andrews, formerly of the Bengal Commissariat Department. His alleged Waterloo service is another mistake, for though he undoubtedly served (as a driver in the Royal Wagon Train) in the campaigns of 1813-14 and 1815 in the Netherlands, he was certainly not present in the great battle. According to official records his age at death was under eighty years. See Memoir in Part II.

634	28th Feb. 1886.	REYNELL GEORGE TAYLOR, C.B, C S.I.	In memory of GENERAL REYNELL GEORGE TAYLOR, C. B. C. S. I. Born at Brighton, January 25 1822: Died at Newton Abbot, South Devon, February 28 1886 A Cavalry Officer of the Indian Army Early tried in war, in the Gwalior campaign, 1843; and on the Sutlej, 1845, he was chosen, in 1846, for civil duty in the Punjab as one of the Assistants to the Resident at Lahore the wisdom, courage. and firmness. with which, while still a young Lieutenant and alone, he controlled a Frontier District during the rising of the Sikh Army in 1848, marked his whole after service on the same Frontier, when the Punjab had become a British province. In daily life, calm in spirit, gentle in speech, loving peace: In the field, against disturbers of the border, firm of purpose, self-reliant, fearless. His strength was quietness and confidence in peace and war alike. Ever earnest in seeking the welfare of the people of India, he longed for their acceptance of the Christian faith, and, himself, furnished means to set on foot a Mission to the people of the Frontier Tribes whom he had ruled and loved. Indian people of all degrees, among whom he lived, as well as his own countrymen, honoured his Christian zeal and devotion no less than his manly and upright life. After serving as Commissioner successively of the Derajat, Peshawar, Ambala, and Amritsar Divisions He retired, in 1877; and at home, as in India, was active in useful duties and good works. He died, as he had lived, leaning on Christ. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee" (Isaiah XXVI. 3.) This Memorial is erected by his friends and comrades.

GRAVE IN CEMETERY, GURDASPUR.

700	8th June 1837. 29th Sept. 1838.	GEORGE AND GEORGINA BUCHANAN.	Sacred to the memory of GEORGE, and GEORGINA, son, and daughter of George, and Lydia BUCHANAN. H. M. 13th L. I. who departed this life, the former on the 8th June1837. Aged 9 Months, and 15 Days. and the latter on the 29th Septr 1838. Aged 11 Months and 6 Days

There was no officer of the name of "George Buchanan" in the 13th L I., nor indeed in the entire British Army, at the period referred to, and the individual mentioned must therefore have been a non-commissioned officer or private soldier; but what a British soldier (apparently with his family) should have been doing at Gurdaspur, in Ranjit Singh's dominions, in 1837-38, is a mystery. The regiment was then at Karnal. The date may be an error for 1857.

When the Punjab Campaign opened, towards the end of November 1848, Raja Sher Singh, the Sikh leader, occupied a position at Ramnagar, on the left bank of the Chenab, with an army of about sixteen thousand men. In accordance with instructions from Lord Gough, Brigadier-General Colin Campbell (the late Lord Clyde) advanced from Saharan on the morning of the 22nd, for the purpose of driving the Sikhs over the river, but on reaching Ramnagar he found that the main body of the enemy had already crossed over to the right bank. There were, however, several small bodies still engaged in making their way from the town to the fords of the Chenab, and to hasten the movements of these, two troops of Horse Artillery were directed to push forward and open fire on the enemy as they crossed, while a squadron of the 3rd Light Dragoons was ordered to charge and clear the left bank of all bodies of Sikhs that might still be found lingering there. The Dragoons, supported by the 8th Light Cavalry, made a brilliant and effective charge, but the Horse Artillery, in their eagerness to engage, became entangled in the sands of the river, and one gun and two waggons became so deeply imbedded that it was found necessary to abandon them when the Sikh leader, opening a heavy fire of artillery from the opposite side, brought the whole of his cavalry back to the left bank of the river. At this moment permission was given to Colonel Havelock, 14th Light Dragoons, to charge the enemy with his regiment, supported by the 5th Light Cavalry, but after defeating and driving back the hostile cavalry on the plain, Colonel Havelock was tempted to charge another body upon whom he came in a dry channel of the river: the event was unfortunate, for the two regiments, exposed to a galling fire of artillery and hampered in their movements by the loose sand, were compelled to retire, with the loss of Colonel Havelock and many men. Brigadier-General Cureton, Commanding the Cavalry, also fell, having, when riding forward unattended for the purpose of recalling Colonel Havelock after his first charge, been shot dead by a Sikh matchlockman concealed in a nullah The British loss, counting the missing as killed, amounted to 26 killed and 64 wounded.

BATTLE FIELD MONUMENT, SADULLAPUR.

751	3rd Dec. 1848.	THOSE KILLED AT SADULLAPUR. A marble cross.	This monument is erected by the government of the Punjab in memorary of those who fell in action at Sadulapur on the 3rd December 1848 23 killed ; 56 wounded ; 1 missing. names of officers killed Jemadar Thanu Ram 25th Bengal Native Infantry Jemadar Mir Imanat Ali 36th Bengal Native Infantry During the last days of November Lord Gough completed his arrangements for the critical operation of making the passage of the Chenab and assailing Sher Singh and the Sikhs in their position on the right bank opposite Ramnagar, and with this object in view, on the night of the 30th he detached Sir Joseph Thackwell with a considerable force to effect a passage some miles above that place, his intention being that Sir Joseph, after getting across, should march down the righ bank and attack the left flank of the Sikhs, while he himsel should, at the right moment, cross at Ramnagar and assai the enemy in front. Owing to the difficulty of the fords and the vigilance with which they were watched and guarded by the Sikhs, Sir Joseph had to march as high up as Wazirabad before he was able to get across the river unopposed; this he effected by noon on the 2nd December, and immediately beginning his march down the right bank, he reached the village of Sadulapur during the forenoon of the 3rd. Here he halted consequent on the receipt of instructions from the Commander-in-Chief directing him to suspend his attack until he had been joined by reinforcements, then on the way to join him. In the meantime, however, the Sikhs had suddenly decamped from their position opposite Ramnagar and moved up the right bank to meet the force under Sir Joseph Thackwell, upon which, during the afternoon of the 3rd, they opened a heavy cannonade. The action which followed was almost entirely one of artillery, Sir Joseph, in accordance with his instructions, remaining entirely on the defensive. It ceased at night-fall, and about midnight Sher Singh, silently drawing off his entire force, slipped off in the darkness and retired towards the Jhelum. The British loss in this action amounted to 24 killed and 57 wounded.

MONUMENTS ON CHILLIANWALA BATTLE FIELD.

			The obelisk which commemorates the battle of Chillianwala is a striking monument some 75 feet high, bearing on the four sides of its pedestal, in English, Panjabi, Urdu and Persian, its dedication to those who fell in the battle. It stands in an enclosure in which are four tombs and three long cement platforms which mark the trenches in which the bodies of the killed were buried. Outside this enclosure, but within an outer and much larger one, stands the Mayo Cross, a beautiful marble cross recording the names of the officers who fell. There are to the westward three other enclosures containing platforms which show where the dead of the 24th Foot have been interred, but they bear no inscription.

A few days after the retreat of Sher Singh to the Jhelum, Lord Gough crossed the Chenab by a bridge-of-boats, and, with the rest of the Army, joined the force under Sir Joseph Thackwell at Helan, to which place the latter had advanced after the action of Sadulapur. Here the whole force halted until the 12th of January, when, intelligence having been received that Chattar Singh, the Hazara rebel, was on the move to join Sher Singh on the Jhelum, Lord Gough marched towards the same point with the intention of attacking Sher Singh before this reinforcement should reach him. In the prosecution of this object, he reached Chillianwala during the afternoon of the 13th, and there found himself in the presence of the Sikh Army (30,000 strong, with 62 guns), which occupied an extended position reaching from Fateh Shah-ki-Chak on their right to Rasul on their left. Preparations were made for encamping, Lord Gough having no intention of delivering battle that day; but Sher Singh, determined to bring on an engagement at once, having advanced from his entrenched position and opened a heavy fire of artillery on the British force, and there being a strong probability that he would advance his guns still further and cannonade the encampment during the night, it became a matter of necessity to dislodge him from his position, and Lord Gough accordingly formed up his forces and moved forward to the attack. On the extreme right of the British line was placed Pope's brigade of Cavalry (the 9th and 14th Light Dragoons and the 1st and 6th Light Cavalry) and three troops of Horse Artillery. To the left of these was Gilbert's Division, composed of the brigades of Godby (the 2nd European Regiment and the 31st and 70th Native Infantry) and Mountain (the 29th Foot and the 30th and 56th Native Infantry). On the extreme left was White's brigade of Cavalry (the 3rd Light Dragoons and the 5th and 8th Light Cavalry) with three troops of Horse Artillery. To the right of these came Campbell's Division composed of the brigades of Pennycuick (the 24th Foot and the 25th and 45th Native Infantry, Penny (15th, 20th and 69th Native Infantry), and Hoggan (the 61st Foot and the 36th and 46th Native Infantry), but of these Penny's brigade (less the 20th Native Infantry, which was on baggage-guard) was held in reserve. The heavy artillery was massed in the centre, and the field batteries were placed between the infantry brigades

Advancing to the attack of the enemy's position, after an hour's cannonading, the British line had to make its way for nearly a mile through thick jungle. Pennycuick's brigade (Her Majesty's 24th leading) was the first that came into action: emerging in some disorder from the jungle at a distance of three hundred yards from the Sikh batteries; the British troops were received with a murderous fire of grape and musketry, which mowed them down in scores before they could close with the enemy, but rushing on with the most undaunted bravery, they threw themselves on the Sikh guns, bayonetted the gunners, put to flight the infantry in support, and for a moment were masters of the position; but the Sikhs, quickly rallying, renewed the fight and, aided by their cavalry, not only recovered their guns, but drove back the exhausted assailants almost to the point from which they had advanced. Penny's brigade was immediately pushed into the fight to fill the gap caused by this repulse, and advanced with great gallantry and steadiness, but losing its way in the jungle it got too far to the right, and eventually came up on the left of Godby's brigade. The Sikhs would thus have been entirely victorious in this part of the field had it not been for the splendid gallantry of Hoggan's brigade and the skill with which its movements were directed by General Campbell: moving forward on the left of, though not in communication with, Pennycuick's brigade, it made its way steadily through the jungle and with a rush carried the Sikh guns in its front; then, driving the enemy before it with immense slaughter, it wheeled to the right, swept the enemy off the whole of the ground from which Pennycuick's brigade had just been repulsed, and maintained its position there until the close of the engagement.

The Cavalry on the left were principally occupied in protecting the flank of Campbell's Division, but the grey squadron of the 3rd Light Dragoons and the 5th Light Cavalry had an opportunity of executing a charge on a portion of the Sikh right, which in the case of the former was delivered with great gallantry and effect, though at the expense of many lives. The 5th Light Cavalry, being much broken in getting through the scrub, and coming under a severe fire of musketry, were unable to make an impression, and suffered a repulse.

On the British right the fighting was as severe as on the left, and there, too, the operations of the day were not unmarked with disaster. Mountain's brigade, advancing with the utmost gallantry through a desolating fire, carried the batteries in its front, and though the 56th Native Infantry, broken in its advance through the jungle, was charged by the Sikh cavalry and driven back with terrible loss, the remaining two regiments of the brigade, the 29th Foot and the 30th Native Intantry, succeeded in maintaining the position they had won, and held it until the end of the fight. At the same time Godby's brigade, pressing forward with equal gallantry, succeeded, after a prolonged contest, in driving off the whole body of Sikhs opposed to it and in capturing every gun in its front. But in the midst of these sanguinary conflicts a grave misfortune befel the cavalry on the right flank, which at a critical moment seriously compromised the safety of Gilbert's Division. By a false movement Pope's brigade had got in front of the Horse Artillery so as to mask entirely the fire of the latter, and in endeavouring to get it clear the Brigadier was cut down by a Sikh horseman. At the same moment an order (by whom given was never ascertained) was heard, directing the brigade to retire, and as the troops fell back they were suddenly and vigorously charged by a body of Sikh cavalry; a disastrous panic ensued; wheeling about and dashing headlong to the rear, the Cavalry rode over and disabled the Horse Artillery batteries, and the Sikhs, following them up closely, sabred many of the gunners and captured and afterwards carried off four guns; had it not been for the gallantry of two squadrons of the 9th Lancers and two of the 6th Light Cavalry, which, rallying as soon as they got clear of the confusion, charged and drove back the Sikh horse, the panic might have had still more disastrous results. However, notwithstanding the discomfiture of Pope's brigade and the danger to which Gilbert's Division thus became exposed of being taken in flank, the latter pressed steadily on, and, as already related, captured the opposing batteries, and expelled the Sikhs from their position.

The battle was now won, but though Sher Singh had been driven from the field and almost all his guns captured, his forces were still unbroken, and when, late at night, he learnt that Lord Gough had retired from the captured position and fallen back to the village of Chillianwala, he immediately re-crossed the Jhelum, over which he had retreated with the greater part of his army, carried off all the captured guns except twelve massacred such of our wounded as had not been removed from the field, and then again took up a position on the heights of Rasul.

In this sanguinary engagement the Sikhs lost not less than 7,000 men. Our own losses were heavy, amounting to 602 killed, 1,651 wounded, and 104 missing,—a total of 2,357. The regiments which suffered most were the 24th Foot with 518 casualties, the 29th Foot with 241, the 61st Foot with 114, the 25th Native Infantry with 204, the 30th Native Infantry with 285, and the 56th Native Infantry with 322. In the terrible list of killed in Her Majesty's 24th were included no less than eleven officers, besides the Brigadier and the Brigade-Major, who both belonged to the regiment.

			Brigadier PENNYCUICK was shot as the regiment first reached the guns. His son ALEXANDER PENNYCUICK, seeing his father fall, rushed to his aid and bestrode his body until he was overwhelmed by numbers. Colonel BROOKES, Captain HARRIS (Major of Brigade), Captain LEE and Captain SHORE fell among the guns. Captain TRAVERS was cut down in the struggle round the guns; his company, the Grenadiers, were the first among the guns, and after having been once repulsed rallied under him and again carried them. Major HARRIS was unhorsed, and as he was retiring with the rest of the corps, was cut down from behind by a single Sikh horseman: he was mortally wounded and carried to the rear Ensign COLLIS and Ensign PHILLIPS, carrying the colours, both fell, struck by grape, close to the guns, and Lieutenants GEORGE PHILLIPS, WOODGATE, and PAYNE fell at the guns. To the list of officers of this regiment who were killed or mortally wounded at Chillianwala may be added the name of Major Howell Paynter, who lingered nearly three years, suffering from a wound received in this battle.

This troop (now the 52nd Field Battery, Royal Artillery) was attached to Gilbert's Division, and sustained heavier losses than any other artillery unit.

For a month after the battle of Chillianwala Lord Gough remained encamped in the vicinity of that place, awaiting reinforcements which were to join him on the fall of Multan, it having been arranged that the First Division of the Army of the Punjab, under Major-General Whish, and part of the Bombay troops employed on the same service, were to join him immediately on the termination of the siege. Before the arrival of these troops, however, Sher Singh, who had been reinforced by the army of his father, Chattar Singh, and by a considerable Afghan force, contributed by the Amir Dost Muhammad Khan, began withdrawing from Rasul, and within a few days he had established himself in a fresh position about a mile to the south of the town of Gujrat. On the 15th February Lord Gough marched after him from Chillianwala and on the 18th encamped at Shadiwal, within three miles of Sher Singh's position; by the 20th he had been joined by the whole of the troops expected from Multan, and on the following day he moved forward to attack the enemy, who, in numbers over 50,000 (including 1,500 Afghan horse), with nearly sixty guns, had entrenched themselves in a strong position, with their right covered by the Dwara nullah and their left by the Katela rivulet, while their centre was formed up behind the villages of Bara Kalra and Chota Kalra, both of which they held in great strength. In his arrangements for the attack, Lord Gough placed on his right the Division under the command of Major-General Whish, composed of the brigades of Hervey (the 10th Foot and the 8th and 52nd Native Infantry) and Markham (the 32nd Foot and the 51st and 72nd Native Infantry); on the left of this Division was Gilbert's, composed of the brigades of Penny (the 2nd European Regiment and the 31st and 70th Native Infantry) and Mountain (the 29th Foot and the 30th and 56th Native Infantry); still further to the left came Campbell's Division, composed of the brigades of Carnegy (the 24th Foot and the 25th Native Infantry) and McLeod (the 61st Foot and the 36th and 46th Native Infantry); on the extreme left was the Bombay brigade, commanded by Brigadier the Hon'ble H. Dundas and composed of the 60th Rifles, the 1st Bombay European Regiment and the 3rd and 19th Bombay Native Infantry. The right flank was protected by the Cavalry brigades of Lockwood and Hearsey and a troop of Horse Artillery, and the left by the Cavalry brigade of White and another troop of Horse Artillery; the heavy guns, eighteen in number, were placed between Mountain's and Carnegy's brigades the rest of the artillery batteries being distributed over various parts of the line The battle was begun with a heavy bombardment of the Sikh position, which was kept up steadily for three hours; the enemy for a long time replied gun for gun but their artillery was eventually overpowered and silenced, and they were compelled to fall back; on this being perceived the Divisions of Whish and Gilbert were pushed forward to the attack, and though they met with a most determined resistance they stormed the Kalra villages and carried that part of the Sikh position. At the same time Campbell advanced on the left with his own Division and Dundas' brigade, and by a skilful use of his Artillery alone forced back the Sikh right and captured the enemy's position in his front, while the Cavalry contributed to the general success by routing and putting to flight the Sikh and Afghan horse Forced back thus along their whole line, the Sikhs made a last desperate effort to stem the Britith advance and retrieve the day by a concentrated attack on the Bombay brigade; taken in flank, however, by the fire of a native field battery, the attacking host was broken up and dispersed, the triumphant advance was continued without a check, and in a few minutes the hostile army was in headlong flight, with the British Cavalry and Horse Artillery in hot pursuit.

BATTLE FIELD CEMETERY, SHAHJAHANGIR, GUJRAT—conc.

			In this decisive engagement the Sikhs lost 56 out of the 59 guns they brought into the field; their loss in men was never ascertained, but in the circumstances, which included thr slaughter of a pursuit of fifteen miles from the field of battle, it must have been extremely heavy. That of the British was comparatively small, amounting to no more than 96 killed, 706 wounded, and 4 missing—806 in all.

On receiving intelligence of the outbreak at Multan, the murder of Mr. Vans Agnew and Lieutenant Anderson, and the rebellion of the Diwan, Mulraj, Lieutenant H. B. Edwardes, Assistant to the Resident at Lahore, who was then occupied in settling the revenue of the country to the south of Bannu, collected some irregular levies in the Derajat and crossed the Indus with the intention of moving on Multan. He was subsequently joined by some troops of the Nawab of Bahawalpur, and, at the head of the combined forces, he defeated the rebels at Kineri (18th June) and Sadusam (1st July), shut Mulraj up in Multan, and recovered the whole of the district except the fortress itself. The task of reducing Multan with his irregular levies was, of course, quite impossible, and it became necessary to detach regular troops from Lahore and Ferozepore for that purpose, though this was not done until some time had elapsed, Lord Gough being averse to undertaking operations during the hot weather. The force detailed for this service was placed under the command of Major-General W. S. Whish of the Bengal Artillery, and consisted of two troops of horse artillery, four companies of foot artillery with a second class siege-train, three companies of sappers and two of pioneers, a brigade of cavalry composed of the 11th Light Cavalry and the 7th and 11th Irregular Cavalry, and a division of infantry composed of two brigades—one (the 10th Foot, and the 8th and 52nd Native Infantry) commanded by Brigadier Hervey, and the other (the 32nd Foot, and the 49th, 51st and 72nd Native Infantry) by Brigadier Markham. To co-operate with this force the Lahore Darbar despatched to Multan a Sikh Army under the command of Raja Sher Singh, but these Darbar troops, as well as their leader, were disaffected, and from the very beginning they were a source of trouble and anxiety to the General in Command.

The force under the command of General Whish took up a position before Multan towards the end of August 1848, and operations for the reduction of the fortress were immediately begun, but there was no serious fighting until the night of the 9th September, when an attempt was made to drive the enemy from some houses in front of the trenches; the attack was repulsed, but another attempt, made in greater force, on the 12th proved more successful and the enemy were driven into the city, though not without considerable loss on our side. It now, however, became apparent that the force under General Whish was quite unequal to the capture of the place, and the question whether the operations should be continued was under serious consideration, when Raja Sher Singh settled the matter by deserting to the enemy with the whole of his force. The siege was immediately raised (14th September), and General Whish withdrew to Suraj-Khund, where he entrenched himself and awaited reinforcements.

Sher Singh, in the following month, marched to the northern parts of the Punjab, and, having been joined by the Sikh troops which had mutinied at Bannu and by various bodies of rebels, he, in November, took up a position on the Chenab, at the head of a force of nearly 20,000 men, with a powerful artillery.

No event of importance took place at Multan until the first week of November, when Mulraj assumed the offensive, and establishing himself in a position outside of the walls, began bombarding the British camp at Suraj-Khund. Little notice was, however, taken of him until the 7th, when, under the orders of General Whish, Brigadier Markham marched out with a part of the force, expelled Mulraj from his position, and sent him and his troops flying back into the city with the loss of five of their guns.

TABLETS IN ST. MARY'S CHURCH, MULTAN—conc.

			On the 21st of December General Whish was joined by the long-expected reinforcements, which, Bengal not being in a position to furnish them, had, of necessity, been drawn from Bombay and Sindh. They consisted of a troop of horse artillery, two companies of foot artillery, two field batteries, two companies of sappers, two regiments of native cavalry (the 1st Bombay Light Cavalry and the Sindh Horse), and two regiments of British and four of native infantry (the 60th Rifles, the 1st Bombay European Regiment, and the 3rd, 4th, 9th and 19th Bombay Native Infantry), the whole under the command of Brigadier-General the Hon'ble H. Dundas (afterwards Lord Melville). On the 25th the siege was resumed, and on the 27th the suburbs of the city were stormed and captured after a strenuous resistance which cost the attacking force over 200 officers and men in killed and wounded. After four days' battering in breach the city itself was stormed and captured on the 2nd January, with a loss of nearly 250 in killed and wounded on our side. Mulraj then took refuge in the citadel, the siege of which was closely pressed; the breaches in the fortifications were soon declared practicable, and the storm was to have taken place on the 21st January, but on that day Mulraj, perceiving the futility of further resistance, sent out an agent to offer submission, and on the following morning he came out and gave himself up. Our total loss during the operations against Multan from August 1848 to January 1849 amounted to 210 killed and 982 wounded.

I. killed on the 27th Decr: 1814, Aged 22 years, with the Light Company of his Regiment while covering the retreat of Major Wm: Richard's column, on the Heights of Jeytuck near Nahan, when the Officer Commanding the company, Lieut: Thackeray and 57 men were killed and wounded by a strong and over-powering column of Goorkhas, led by Cazee Ranzore Thapa, the remains of the deceased with the other Officers (Lieut: MUNT, THACKERAY and Ensign STALKERT) were burried at this spot, and this Tomb erected, by the surviving Officers of the Light Battn: to their memory. This slab was placed, by an affectionate Brother after a lapse of twenty-five years, the original having been lost.

The Actions of Jampta and Jaithak.

Major-General Martindell, who had been appointed to succed General Gillespie (killed before Kalanga) in the Command of the troops in the Dehra Dun, having joined at Moginand on the 19th December 1814. marched within the next few days towards Nahan, with the object of driving off the Gurkha force which had assembled there under the command of Ranjur Singh Thapa, the son of Amar Singh Thapa, the Commander-in-Chief of the Gurkha Army in the Western Himalayas. On his approach the Gurkhas evacuated Nahan and took up a fresh position at Jaithak, a lofty and ragged eminence situated to the north of the town. On the 27th Martindell proceeded to dislodge the enemy from this position and organised for the purpose two columns of attack,—one, about a thousand strong, under the command of Major John Ludlow, and the other, numbering about seven hundred men, under that of Major (afterwards General Sir William) Richards. Major Ludlow's column was the first in action; encountering the Gurkha force near the village of Jampta, it at first met with complete success, but pressing on and attempting without adequate preparation, to storm one of the enemy's stockades a short distance off, a disastrous repulse was experienced, ending in the complete rout of the detachment, which with much difficulty made its way back to Martindell's camp, with a loss of 156 officers and men killed and wounded, Lieutenant Munt, of the 1st, Battalion, 1st N. I, serving with the Light Battalion, being amongst the former.

A still worse disaster befel the column under Major Richards though that officer's forward movement, like that of Ludlow was at first a success. Having won his way into a position in which he completely cut off the water-supply of the Gurkhas on Jaithak hill, he there sustained for six hours, a series of furious and desperate attacks, and he would most probably have succeeded in maintaining his ground had not his ammunition begun to run low and orders (based on the defeat of Ludlow's column) been received from Martindell directing him to retire He accordingly began to withdraw his column, but this movement, attempted by exhausted men on a rugged and almost pathless mountain side, presently created the most dire confusion, and resulted in a disastrous defeat and rout, and it would probably have ended in the complete annihilation of the detachment had it not been for the noble devotion of Lieutenant Thackeray, Ensign Wilson, and the Light Company of the 2nd Battalion, 26th N.I., forming part of the Light Battalion, who threw themselves across the path of the pursuing enemy and sacrificed themselves almost to a man to save the rest of the column. As it was the remnant of the detachment made its way back to camp, having sustained a loss (excluding prisoners taken by the enemy) of 73 killed and 233 wounded, Lieutenant Thackeray and Ensign Wilson, of the Light Battalion, and Ensign Stalkart, of the 1st Battalion, 13th N. I., being amongst the former.

GRAVES AT NAHAN—concld.

			After this repulse General Martindell contented himself with simply blockading Jaithak, and the place remained in the hands of the enemy until Amar Singh Thapa and the whole of the Western Gurkha Army surrendered to Sir David Ochterlony in April 1815.
908	...	JOHN ALEXANDER SCOTT.	Sacred to the memory of Lt: Col : J. A. SCOTT R. A. M. G., born Dublin 13th Feby 1836. Died Nahan 4th Feby 1900. Thy will be done.

PESHAWAR DISTRICT.

MACKESON MEMORIAL, PESHAWAR.

931	14th Sept. 1853.	FREDERICK MACKESON Opposite the kutchery in Peshawar.	Here lies the body of FREDERICK MACKESON Lieutenant Colonel in the Bengal Army Companion of the Bath and Commissioner of Peshawur who was born September 2nd 1807 and died September 14th 1853 of a wound inflicted by a religious fanatic He was the beau-ideal of a Soldier: cool to conceive, brave to dare, and strong to do. The Indian Army was proud of his noble presence in its ranks—Not without cause. On the dark page of the Affghan War, the name of "Mackeson" shines brightly out, The frontier was his post, and the future was his field. The defiles of the Khyber, and the peaks of the Black Mountain, alike witness his exploits—Death still found him in the front. Unconquered Enemies felt safer when he fell—His own Government thus mourned the fall; "The reputation of Lieutenant Colonel Mackeson as a soldier is known to, and honored by all. His value as a Political servant of the state is known to none better than to the Governor General himself, who in a difficult and eventful time had cause to mark his great ability, and the admirable prudence, discretion and temper which added tenfold value to the high soldierly qualities of his warlike character." "The loss of Colonel Mackeson's life would have dimmed a victory. To lose him thus by the hand of a foul assassin is a misfortune of the heaviest gloom, for the Government which counted him amongst its bravest and best." 'General Orders of the Marquis Dalhousie, Governor General of India 3rd: October 1853 This Monument was erected by his friends

CITY CEMETERY, PESHAWAR.

932	...	...	The oldest cemetery in Peshawar is that outside the N. E. gate of the city. There are several tombs in it, but all the inscriptions had disappeared by 1870. The legend that this tomb beneath the words "shot by his chaukidar" has inscribed "well done thou good and faithful servant" is curiously widespread and dies very hard in spite of repeated contradictions. Its origin is to be found in the entry in the register of which an accurate copy is given below. It will be seen that the words "well done," &c., do not follow the mention of his death at the hands of his chaukidar. It may be mentioned that it is quite wrong to say that he was murdered he was walking about the garden at night and was taken for a thief.

Major Burroughs, who succeeded Colonel Macdonald in command of the 93rd, wrote as follows from Camp Jalozai on the 31st Oct 862 :—"Colonel Macdonald succeeded Major Middleton who died of cholera 21-10-62, in command of the 93rd; when he himself was attacked by the disease at Camp Oomur, about 10 miles S. E. of the City of Peshawur, on the 22nd Oct. He died at 3 A.M. on the morning of the 29th, and his remains are interred on the top of a hillock to the south of and overlooking the village of Jalozai, about 17 miles S. E. of Peshawur. A cairn has been erected by the Regiment to mark the spot where our Commanding officer lies buried." An obelisk was raised to mark the spot, with an inscription on a tablet which was subsequently lost. The wording of the inscription was however recovered from a photograph in the possession of the deceased officer's family, and a replica was placed on his tomb in 1906. The tablet on the second monument was also lost, and it cannot be ascertained what the inscription originally was. The regiment marched from Urmur to Jalozai on the 23rd, and Ensign Drysdale and Assistant-Surgeon Hope died on the march. Captain Burgoyne, in his History of the Regiment, records that Major Middleton was buried at Urmur and the other three officers at Jalozai.
